Dedication

This series of books is dedicated to all those kothis, their partners and families who have died from AIDS alone and uncared for.

Thanks

We would like to thank all those who have participated in social and needs assessments, sexual health projects, interviews, workshops and meetings for their patience, honesty, openness, and friendship, people who patiently told us their stories in parks, tea-stalls, street corners, restaurants, rickshaws, and hotel lobbies. We would also like to thank those individuals and organisation that have taken up the challenge to develop appropriate service responses to the expressed needs of males who have sex with males, for whom this manual is written. This resource would not have been possible without them.

We would also like thank UNAIDS for their financial support and encouragement in upgrading this resource.

Introduction to the book and series

This is the fifth volume in a set of handbooks that provides a theoretical framework, and step-by-step approach to developing community-based organisations addressing issues affecting males who have sex with males (MSM). This set has arisen out of the extensive community development work that the Naz Foundation International has undertaken in South Asia in addressing issues that affect MSM. Since 1996, the model detailed in this series has been used to develop more than thirty projects addressing issues that affect males who have sex with males. We hope that in its new format it will assist in the development of many more such projects to ensure that all males who have sex with male have access to appropriate sexual health, HIV/AIDS prevention, care and welfare services.

Book 1 gave a basic introduction to Naz Foundation International and a glossary of terms used in the series, with a theoretical framework of sexuality and sexual health in South Asia.

Book 2 provides the socio-cultural context in which male-to-male sex occurs in South Asia, and the developmental processes NFI are essential to ensure that at risk populations of MSM will have access to appropriate sexual health and HIV/AIDS services.

NFI firmly believes that the most appropriate strategy improving health seeking behaviours and reducing risk of STI/HIV infection for both MSM and their both their male and female sexual partners is through self-help and community-based organizing. This means empowering networks of MSM to develop their own sexual health services as a peer-led intervention.

While utilising non MSM NGOs and government agencies to conduct sexual health interventions among MSM may be required initially since no such MSM self-help organization exists, NFI strongly believes that such an agency should be developed as a part of the intervention strategy that will take on the management and service delivery of the intervention. Such an approach provides an essential part of the framework for developing a framework of an enabling and empowering environment to sustain risk reduction.

Further a key concept embedded within the NFI strategy is the firmly held belief that sexual health is not only about disease prevention, but also the promotion of well-being. This means that it is essential to understand the social, cultural, religious, familial, psychological, physical and personal frameworks in which sexual behaviours take place. This means exploring concepts of masculinities and sexualities and the differing frameworks of class, poverty and education also.

Book 3 explored the first phase of developing a peer-led intervention in a particular town or city. It needs to be recognised that in the main there is no such thing as an MSM community, but a series of autonomous networks of differing sexualities and identities, and that in South Asia the primary frameworks appears to be based on gendered roles, practices and performance. It is essential therefore before any intervention is developed, to discover what networks do exist, and what the sexual practices are, sexual health concerns, levels of knowledge, and attitudes and behaviour among the differing networks and participants in male-to-male sexual behaviours. In other words, a social and risk assessment among at-risk MSM needs to be done. The process involves a 7-day workshops is detailed in this book.

Since the principal that NFI follows is that of MSM sexual health interventions based on self-help and peer leadership, management and leadership, Book 4 explores the process for developing and implementing such a project. This involves a five-day workshop which explores project development and management with a range of tools that go with this.

Book 5 of the series provided a range of models for management, including job descriptions, terms and conditions of employment, project reports, and so on. These are all useful for management procedures as an integral component of the intervention. It is not suggested that one should adopt these without reference to the specific needs of each individual project, but it does provide a reference tool when developing these specific aspects of management to make the project more successful.

The final book for the series provides a range of useful references and resources, along with webmail IDs to access certain useful documents for further reading and studying by Project Managers and other key staff of the intervention project.

The Series

This series of handbooks provides a comprehensive guide and tool kit towards developing a community-based male sexual health programme working with males who have sex with males.

It is designed to be MSM specific, focusing on the most visible of MSM from low-income networks, those who self-identify as feminised males, such as kothis. It is based on the principles of self-help and peer education, using trained MSM to skill-up others to develop their own services.

Once trained and an appropriate service is developed, these key individuals are not only used to access others like themselves, but also to reach out to their partners and other dynamics of MSM sexual behaviours, towards building a comprehensive male sexual health programme.

The set consists of 6 Books :

Book One:	Introduction
Book Two:	Setting the context
Book Three:	Developing an MSM CBO
Book Four:	Implementing an MSM Sexual Health Project
Book Five:	Tools for Management
Book Six:	Other Resources

The workshops are detailed and follow a time-table and agenda that has arisen from the many workshops conducted by NFI with this particular population group. It recognises that for the majority, there would be almost no experience of HIV/AIDS, community-based working, or understanding of the context in which sexual health promotion takes place. However, these timetables and agendas are not set in stone, and can be amended as and when necessary.

NFI has used its own trained trainers to implement the development of such MSM sexual health interventions, and it is highly recommended that those wishing to utilise this resource should thoroughly familiarize themselves with the theoretical perspective, language and a deep understanding of the frameworks of MSM behaviours, identities, sexualities and masculinities before proceeding.

We have developed a list of significant websites that you may wish to access for additional documentation, resources and information. Along with this is a list of useful documents that you can write to the organizations for copies.
